

I strongly oppose any move by the government to expand wiretapping on the Internet. I believe this violates the open and unregulated spirit that has made the Internet what it is today. I am also worried that this initiative may start a slippery slope towards the curtailing of free speech on the Internet. China is a prime example of what happens when a government has too much power over the infrastructure of the Internet. There, the government is easily able to halt people from expressing themselves freely. Please leave the internet as it is. It works fine, and criminals can be caught in other ways than 'Internet wiretapping.'
